Robinson Crusoe

1. Robinson Crusoe was shipwrecked on a small island near the coast of Venezuela. Robinson was the only survivor but he collected useful things from the ship before it sank: tools, seeds and guns. He made his home in a cave, planted corn and had tame goats for milk and meat. He was happy on his island until one day he saw something ...

2. "This afternoon, I was walking along the beach when I saw the footprint of a man in the sand! I listened and I looked round me but I couldn't hear or see anything. I was frightened and ran home to my cave on the other side of the island. That night it was impossible to sleep. I was thinking all the time, "Who was this person? What was he doing on my island?"

3. The next day, I decided that the footprint was probably that of a native from the mainland. What would happen if these natives found my boat or my fields? I was so afraid that I stayed in my cave for three days and three nights. Then, I started to go out to collect food and to milk my goats but started building a wall around my cave for protection.

4. A few months later, I was exploring the other side of the island when I saw some bones on the beach. There were human heads, hands and feet! The natives were cannibals and they came to my island to eat their prisoners. I became more careful than before and always carried my gun and three pistols. I made plans to kill them and to rescue their prisoners but what could one man do against thirty or forty natives? I decided to live quietly and not to visit the other side of the island.

5. A few months later, there was a storm and I heard the noise of a ship's gun. Immediately, I ran to the top of the hill and made a fire to attract the ship's attention. However, the next day I saw the wreck of the ship near some big rocks. I went out to the ship in my small boat but there were no survivors. I found some boxes and took them back to my cave. When I opened them, I found clothes and food and also lots of gold and silver. I was now rich, but all this gold and silver was worth nothing to me, alone on my island.

6. One day, I saw some canoes on my side of the island. Through my telescope, I watched the cannibals with two prisoners. Suddenly, one of them escaped and ran along the beach very fast and came towards my cave. Two of the cannibals ran after him, but I decided to try to save the poor man's life. I went out with my guns and killed the two cannibals.

7. The man was frightened, but finally he came to me. I took him to my cave and gave him food and water. Soon, he fell asleep and when he woke up I began to talk to him and teach him to speak to me. I called him Friday, because it was the day I saved his life. Finally, I was not alone on the island and now I had a servant, too.'

8. After almost thirty years on the island, Crusoe is finally rescued by a ship. However, leaving the island behind is bittersweet for him as he has come to appreciate the simple and peaceful life he had built there. He returns to England with newfound wisdom and wealth from his adventures, but the memories of his time on the island will always remain with him.

9. Robinson Crusoe is not only a tale of adventure and survival but also a story of personal growth and resilience. It teaches us about the importance of self-reliance, adaptation, and the inherent strength of the human spirit.
